Cool At School: Signing Time

UPDATED: MAY 09, 2008 10:37 AM

Kids at Kesterson Elementary School got a special treat, and are learning new things with its unique Sign Language Club. So when T. V. star Rachel Coleman popped into town, she had to stop by.

Coleman is the host and co-creator of "Signing Time" Which airs on PBS Stations throughout America... Including Las Vegas. Her oldest daughter was born deaf and another child suffers from spina bifida and cerebral palsy. Coleman says sign language allows her family to communicate and she is a driving force behind it's growing acceptance.

"So many schools are set up for the auditory learner. Signing Time host Rachel Coleman tells Eyewitness News. And not everybody is an auditory learner and with sign language, it's the whole body, it's physical, it's kinesthetic, it's visual, its special."

Coleman also says sign language can be a valuable tool in helping babies learn.

"It's just really is an incredible learning tool for every single child. Says Coleman. If you know and love a child, sign with them."

Here is something else that's cool at school, beginning this fall, the Clark County School District will roll out a charter school for the deaf.
